Notes

The «knee»kura thing is my sleep-deprivation-addled brain's attempt to convey they slightly odd way the name Niikura is written when Nagumo says it.

Abebe is referring to Abebe Bikila, an Ethiopian Olympic marathon runner. He won a gold medal in the 1960 summer Olympics while running barefoot. Hardcore

Saturday is a half-day for most(many?) schools in Japan, including Matsuri's.

For large trash items in Japan, you have to schedule pickup with the organization that does that, you can't just put it out by the road or whatever. You also have to pay for it, usually between 200 and 1500 yen, depending on size and difficulty of disposal.

Lifting is that juggling-a-soccer-ball-with-your-feet thing soccer players do for practice.

Haniwa
Clay figurines used in funerals/burials in Japan's Kofun Period between 200-500 AD

Dogū
Clay figurines of unknown purpose that were made in Japan's Jomon Period between 14 000-400 BC

ドキ is "doki," as in the heartbeat sound effect

土器 is also pronounced "doki," but means clay/earthenware item (especially pottery)
